They may object to evidential, natural theological arguments on the basis that we always access reality by way of our presuppositions. Of course, since Clark denied genuine free will, these possibilities were not open to .
Still, this argument has a great deal of force. Peter Bines rated it really liked it His unique method was called the "presuppositional" defense of the faith, which is elucidated in this paper. While there are many forms of argument one may use, eventually one should mention that the ultimate issue is that the nonchristian is interpreting reality according to his idolatrous presupposition.

Dr Michael S Horton. Christopher marked it as to-read Jan 26, They do not simply know a proposition about God, but they are covenantally related to God in such a way that, in the core of their created beings, they know intimately the God who made. Fruit of the Spirit.
