Leo Brice is a man obsessed. And you'd lift, not fast, but insistently enough to stay afraid, and soon the very same buildings you used to go into and out of would begin to look like freckles on the face of the Earth, and after that, you'd cross into cold darkness, the lights growing fainter and fainter until there were no lights at all -- not even from the stars, which you'd long passed by-- and you'd keep drifting like that, untethered from all the things you loved, in a straight line out, forever. Instead, while reading this one, you get practically besotted with the language and don't even realize how many pages you've read.
