Finally, as illustrated in Table 6 and Figure 11as compared to the EAP, domestic workers tend to be single or separated in greater proportion. Introduction 1 Britain was the pre-eminent global maritime power for decades, but it does not qualify as a small s Ex-anteorex-postmitigation? This factual observation merits some careful scrutiny, since there is neither a shortage of candidates, nor a reticence from the lingering colonial powers – particularly Denmark, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom – to judge this motley set of candidates as fit to graduate to sovereignty. These considerations and the paradoxes that underlie the empirical reality of the Caribbean and development experience motivate this paper.
